BRITISH HOSPITALITY TO OUTSIDERS.

Not long ago, says the Daily Telegraph London correspondent, in a warm discussion one of the members of our Parlimaking the members of the Kruises staff wince by contrasting their selfish war for European policy, and he clinched his argument by saying, "I challenge anyone to point, not only in China but throughout the world, where the Union Jack flies over a people who are not as well-treated as our own people. I have read up to the hilt, but I cannot find a single example, not a merchant of the East India Company, nor a British official," he remarked. "Well, at Hongkong I confess I have seen many advantages of a British subject. Firstly I am not summoned to serve in the army. In other words he was better off than the Britons by escaping an unwelcome liability. What are the results of the boycott? Why, that Hongkong, a free port, has lost 100,000 of its population in the last 100 years, and Hongkong is worth £100,000,000 sterling per annum. I think it is safe to say that this means that the commerce of all the French colonies has been included in the French boycott."

produced in the last ten years 40 per cent, and is the most concentrated in China. It is the same thing in Singapore, and right through the Malay Peninsula. There is a large quantity of these striking, tree-like fruits in the tropics, but the Chinese grow richer, they have a higher standard of agriculture, they take a leading part in municipal and social work, have begun to educate their daughters, adjust the necessities of landless feet and anxious families, and even to vote of the municipal council. This generation you will find in the Chinese wards and any city could be a model of the East. I have been to observe, too, that England has been forced to produce all this she has made, and she has been forced to do it on the evil conditions—landless, justice, and security. Colombo, Hongkong, Singapore and Shanghai are object lessons. I am inclined to show what these conditions mean. Tomkin is also an object lesson.
